WHITE PEARL

Wonders of the Deeper South

Gan to Kooddoo | Addu, Fuvahmulah and Huvadhoo

The Deep South has stunning visibility and the chance to meet whale sharks, tiger sharks, oceanic manta rays and thresher sharks.

On the south plateau of Fuvahmulah, tiger, silky, silvertip and thresher sharks come together, with big schools of barracuda, yellowfin tuna and bonitos, and even sailfish and whales in season.

In Addu, a historic WWII wreck lies on the seabed, and a manta cleaning station draws the rays in.

Huvadhoo has one of the deepest lagoons in the Maldives, with vast swathes of healthy reef and channels where sharks patrol.

Between January and April, whale sharks rise to the lights at night and you can slide in beside them.

Where you dive

1

Addu Atoll

Dive sites: British Loyalty wreck and Maa Manta Point.
Addu atoll an enticing mix of reefs and channels, wrecks and exciting drifts.
Home to WWII the HMS British Loyalty wreck - almost 6000 tons and 134 metres, sitting at 33 metres!
As well as the popular majestic Manta Cleaning station Maa Kandu, which is a great way to start or end your trip.

2

Fuvahmulah Atoll

Dive sites: Plateau and Tiger Zoo.
With more and more dive sites being discovered every year, Fuvahmulah's relatively unknown diving, unique location and isolation make it one of the Maldives' top destinations if you are feeling a little adventurous.

3

Huvadhoo Atoll

Dive sites: Villingili and Nilhanhoo kandu.
Huvadhoo Atoll is also known as Gaafu Atoll in the Maldives.
Huvadhoo splits more or less evenly between the inner lagoon and the outer reef.
Thanks to its remote location, the atoll offers vast swathes of healthy reefs, populated by impressive table corals and staghorns, although soft corals such as sea fans can also be seen.
